Bestselling Author and Standup Comic Was Homeless Addict and Human Trafficking Victim

An Inspirational Journey

Marti MacGibbon was a rising star, a standup comic, scheduled to appear on The "Tonight Show" before she lost it all.

As part of her downward spiral, MacGibbon became ensnared in a human trafficking operation that left her trapped in Japan, enslaved to the Japanese mob.

Today, MacGibbon is happily married and is a professional speaker. She is the author of the Amazon #1 bestselling memoir, "Never Give in to Fear: Laughing All the Way Up from Rock Bottom."

In her book, MacGibbon talks about her life, with brutal honesty and humor. She will tell your audience about:

A brush with a serial killer

Misadventures in the California drug scene

How she overcame physical and sexual abuse

How she became a victim of human trafficking

How she escaped the Japanese mob

How she found the love of her life

How she triumphed over addiction and homelessness to lead a successful life

MacGibbon has been clean for 17 years. "If I can laugh all the way up from rock bottom, anyone can," she said.

In addition to being an author, MacGibbon is a certified addiction counselor and a member of the National Speakers Association.
